Chicago ranked second most 'bike-friendly' city

Bicycling Magazine's biennial ranking gave New York No. 1 spot

By Rachel Cromidas | REDEYE

Three years after Mayor Emanuel first pledged to make Chicago the nation's most "bike-friendly" city, Chicago has inched its way up to No. 2.

That's according to Bicycling Magazine, which biennially ranks 50 U.S. cities for their bicycle infrastructure and the popularity of cycling among their residents. Chicago was in 10th place back in 2010, and moved up to the No. 5 slot in 2012, according to the magazine's ranking. This year, New York City took top honors.

But Chicago's jump in the rankings surprised some of the city's regular riders.

"I would think places like Seattle and Portland, where I assume there's less traffic, would have done better," said Cathi Odothman, 42, of Uptown.

Minneapolis was ranked behind Chicago in third place, while Portland came in fourth, and Washington, D.C., came in fifth. Seattle took the eighth rank.

Odothman said she frequently takes Grand Avenue to and from her job in River North, and, "that's a major street; you're fighting delivery trucks, you're fighting cabs. It's the most hectic part of my commute."

In a statement, Emanuel said the rankings showed Chicago is "setting a new standard" for other cities in improving cycling options.

"This new ranking by Bicycling Magazine demonstrates that Chicago is on the right path to becoming the best cycling city in America," he said.

Chicago scored well in each of the magazine's metrics, which included the number of bike facilities and lanes per square mile, the ratio of citizens to bike-share bikes, the number of cycling fatalities and the bike-friendliness of local businesses, according to an article the magazine published online last week.

The magazine cited the city's Navy Pier Flyover construction project, the recent hike in fines for dooring cyclists and the plans for new protected bike lanes as a few of the reasons Chicago rose in the rankings. It also applauded the city for helping Chicagoans "re-discover" cycling.

Ryan Griffith, 28, of Evanston, said the advent of Divvy, Chicago's year-old bike-sharing program, turned him into a cyclist.

"I never biked in the city until I picked up a Divvy, but now I do it every single day," he said. "I think it's getting better."

John Greenfield, an editor for the city's transportation news blog Streetsblog Chicago, wrote Friday that the city's jump in the rankings seems unlikely, but might be well-deserved in the context of the recent gains the city has made, expanding its bike-share program and the number of buffer- and barrier-protected bike lanes.

"It would still be quite a stretch to argue that a typical bike ride in Chicago is safer or more relaxing than one in Portland or the City of Lakes," Greenfield wrote. "But the Bicycling rankings are an opportunity for Chicagoans to give themselves a well-earned pat on the back for the major strides we've made in the past few years."

A smoother ride to Midway?

GOING PUBLIC

The best way to fly to Midway Airport may soon be via the CTA.

The CTA is eyeing an overhaul of the 3200-series rail cars that run on the Orange and Brown lines. The move is expected to create a smoother ride on these two rail lines, CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said. The transit agency will be issuing a request for proposals to create and deliver parts to overhaul the rail cars.

The CTA board is slated to approve the parts request, valued at nearly $92 million, at Wednesday's monthly board meeting. The agency is providing the labor for the overhaul, which is expected to cost a total of $166 million for 257 cars, Chase said.

The cars will "feel spruced up. Their performance will improve," Chase said.

The alterations include changes such as electronic signs that display train destination and new doors. The overhaul is expected to begin in the spring and last through 2016. The 3200-series cars were built in the 1990s. The fixes are expected to extend the cars' lives for six years until the arrival of the new 7000-series, which will replace older cars on the Brown, Orange and Blue lines.

Later this year, the CTA is expected to issue a request for proposals to create the new 7000-series cars, which could be delivered as early as 2017.

The agency had issued a similar request months ago but only received two bids because of a requirement that the 7000-series cars would have to be compatible with the 5000-series cars with the aisle-facing seats. Officials said they decided to drop that requirement in the hopes of getting more bids.

One feature of the 7000-series cars that is staying the same through the bidding process is the seating. The 7000-series cars will have a combination of forward-, aisle- and rear-facing seats.

Some riders have complained about the aisle-facing seats on the 5000-series cars, which were introduced on the CTA in 2010. Some say they feel cramped together in the bucket seats on those cars and have expressed difficulty in carrying a large bag or coat because of a lack of elbow room.

More than 500 of the 5000-series cars are operating on the CTA on the Green, Pink, Yellow, Red and Purple lines. The agency expects the final 200 cars to be delivered by the end of next year.

The Illinois Chapter of the American Planning Association, an organization devoted to urban planning, is hosting a presentation Wednesday about how to increase train operations and improve pedestrian flow at Union Station. The meeting will be held 9 a.m. to noon, at Union Station, 222 S. Riverside Plaza. Tickets are $15. Go to www.ilapa.org for more information.

It's Throwback Thursday every day at this CTA station in Bronzeville. Murals of jazz musicians adorn the stationhouse walls, a nod to the area's concentration of blues and jazz clubs in the 20th century. While the station is nothing flashy, the area around the station yields more blues artwork and history. "The Blues Brothers" filmed steps away at Shelly's Loan and Jewelry, which was featured as Ray's Music Exchange in the movie.

Let the streaming begin, Northwestern

University is the first in the Midwest to offer free cable via Wi-Fi to students

Chicago Tribune

Northwestern University is rolling out a new perk for students that no Ivy League school can match—full streaming cable service for all dorm dwellers.

Beginning this fall, Xfinity on Campus will provide residential students more than 130 live channels, including everything from major broadcast networks to Comedy Central, sent via Wi-Fi to their computers, laptops and mobile devices.

"It fits with students' lifestyles. They can watch live TV content in their rooms and on campus, as well as gain access to programming when they're off campus," Paul Riel, executive director of residential services for Evanston-based Northwestern University, said in a statement.

"Another benefit is that they do not have to buy or bring TVs, so they will not have to give up precious space in their rooms or disturb their roommates when they want to watch a program," he said.

Northwestern is the first university in the

REUTERS FILE

Midwest to offer the service, and one of only eight across the U.S., Comcast said Monday. The cost for streaming cable is included in the rent for campus housing. Students can upgrade their service to gain access to premium channels such as HBO and Showtime.

Comcast launched Xfinity on Campus in August. Other participating schools include Bridgewater College, Drexel University, Emerson College, University of Delaware and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Extending Express service?

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Evanston city officials are trying to gauge resident interest in extending service hours for the Purple Line Express, which operates between Chicago and the suburbs, as well as expanding bus service.

The suburb is hosting an online poll about transit options and holding sessions this month to discuss the survey results.

Evanston has received more than 1,450 responses to the poll, posted in July at survey.monkey.com/s/evanstontransitpoll. Survey responses still will be accepted after the sessions, the city said.

The four-question poll asks residents whether the Purple Line Express should operate for longer hours; about their primary mode of transportation in Evanston; and whether they would be interested in a bus system that serves only Evanston and, if so, where the bus should stop.

Ylida Capriccioso, assistant to the Evanston city manager, said the city is trying to figure out how to better serve the needs of its residents. While Evanston has various transportation options—from biking to CTA to Metra—some of these transit modes are best suited for workers on an 8 to 5 schedule, Capriccioso said. For most of the day, the Purple Line operates between the Linden stop in Wilmette and the Howard stop in Rogers Park.

During morning and evening rush hour, the Purple Line extends south of the Howard stop into the Loop. Express trains run nonstop between the Howard stop and the Belmont stop in Lakeview and continue onto the Loop and back up to the suburbs.

Rush hour trains to the Loop operate 5:20 a.m. to 9:30 a.m., and 2:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. Trains from the Loop operate 6:05 a.m. to 10:15 a.m., and 3:15 p.m. to 7:15 p.m.

Capriccioso said the city has heard interest from residents and businesses in running Purple Line Express trains to the Loop beyond 6:30 p.m.

The Purple Line saw 3.22 million riders last year, down 1.3 percent from 2012. It is the sixth busiest line of the CTA's eight lines. The CTA last extended Purple Line Express hours in 2002, after experimenting with additional rush hour service.

The agency will be adding a Purple Line Express stop to the Wilson Red Line station in Uptown as part of a station overhaul expected to begin this fall and last into 2017.

Nearly 43 percent of Purple Line Express track was under slow zone last month, according to CTA data. In slow zones, trains run 35 miles per hour or slower because of track conditions or construction. Trains can operate at 55 miles per hour systemwide.

Couple charged with holding woman captive

1 A southwest Indiana couple accused of holding a mother of two captive in a wooden cage for two months and binding her to a bed with bungee cords was charged Monday with rape and kidnapping, prosecutors said. The 30-year-old woman reported missing in mid-July was rescued Saturday, prosecutors said.

Poll shows Scots may vote for independence

3 British financial markets tumbled Monday after an opinion poll showed for the first time this year that Scots may vote for independence in a referendum next week. The survey prompted concern bordering on panic among Britain's ruling elite, with Prime Minister David Cameron's Conservative-led government promising proposals this week to grant Scotland greater autonomy if it stays.

Respiratory virus striking children

A respiratory virus that sent dozens of children to an Illinois hospital over the Labor Day weekend may be the same one that has sickened hundreds of children across the Midwest, according to authorities.

More than 70 children showed up at Blessing Hospital in Quincy during the Labor Day holiday with symptoms of a respiratory virus, according to the hospital. Doctors are still working with state health officials to identify the virus, but a news release from the hospital indicated the infection may be the same one that struck St. Louis and Kansas City, Mo., in recent days.

The outbreaks in those cities were caused by the respiratory infection EV-D68, which starts with symptoms similar to a common cold and turns into respiratory distress. Many states have already asked for federal help testing and tracking cases, according to federal and state health officials.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is helping Missouri test and track the illnesses reported, Ryan Hobart, a spokesman for the Missouri Department of Health and Senior Services, said Monday.

There is no vaccine against the virus, Kocielek said. Effective ways to slow its spread include washing hands for at least 20 seconds and using an elbow to cover coughs and sneezes, he said.

Suspected outbreaks have also been recorded in Kansas, Kentucky, Iowa, Colorado, Ohio, Oklahoma, North Carolina, and Georgia, Mark Pallansch, director of the CDC's Division of Viral Diseases, told CNN.

Appeals court tackles 3 gay marriage bans

6 Gay marriage bans in Nevada, Idaho and Hawaii came under scrutiny Monday when a U.S. appeals court waded back into a civil rights debate that has swept through courthouses across the country.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco heard arguments on whether judges in Nevada and Hawaii were correct to uphold those states' gay marriage bans. Hawaii's legislature subsequently voted to allow same-sex nuptials, while a federal judge struck down Idaho's gay marriage prohibition.

In court Monday, Monte Neil Stewart, representing the governor of Idaho, argued that same sex marriages would reduce the status of the institution of marriage and lead to lower marriage rates over time.

However, Judge Marsha Berzon said marriage rates have already been falling for years. "That may be a bad thing, but it doesn't seem to have anything to do with this," Berzon said.

Judge Stephen Reinhardt, added, "Does Idaho prohibit divorce because it sends a bad message to people?"

The number of children crossing illegally on their own into the United States dropped 70 percent from June to August. Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said Monday. U.S. government figures show 3,141 unaccompanied children tried to cross the border in August, compared with this year's peaks of 10,580 in May and 10,622 in June. The July figure was 5,501. Adults with children trying to cross into the country dropped to 3,295 in August from 16,329 in June, they show.

BECAUSE FOOTBALL BEFORE EVERYTHING

America's blind obsession with football has to stop

Jessica Galliard

■ redeye@tribune.com
■ @jessicagalliard

Football culture has always perplexed me. The level of obsession seems to come before everything else in life, arguably more so than it does for fans of baseball, hockey or basketball. Perhaps my hatred for the sport and its fans comes from growing up in a rabid Green Bay Packers household (gross), with my parents often missing a concert of mine or picking me up late in favor of watching whatever game was on.

Because football before everything.

I had this adorable thought that moving out of my parents' house could get me away from the football-is-life mentality—ha! Football season permeates our offices, homes, Twitter feeds and neighborhood bars. We can't escape it, no matter how much some of us try.

But despite non-fans not being able to escape all things pigskin, there's one thing fans seem to have no problem overlooking, at least until it's impossible to ignore: the criminal transgressions of players off the field, and the NFL's consistency in ignoring and, by proxy, supporting them.

In the past few years, we've seen scandal

“There's one thing fans seem to have no problem overlooking, at least until it's impossible to ignore: the criminal transgressions of players off the field, and the NFL's consistency in ignoring and, by proxy, supporting them.

after scandal leak through the NFL's public relations department and get looked over by said rabid fans. This dilemma of conscience of whether to support a public figure or agency whose actions don't align with your morals is not unlike many of the conversations had in other industries, with the big difference being the NFL and its teams consistently have supported players behaving badly with laughable “punishments” and a steady stream of paychecks.

Line after line of DUI arrests, drug charges and domestic violence incidents for football players? Players who post bond and go right back to work gaining yards on the field? Put him in jail! Bad role model! Stop ruining my dreams of a winning season for my team, NFL!

NFL players in trouble

Unfortunately, domestic violence incidents in the NFL are all too common. Bears receiver Brandon Marshall has been charged with domestic violence twice, most recently in 2009; charges were dropped in one case and he was found not guilty in the other. In the past three years alone, there have been at least 10 such incidents.

8/31/2014: San Francisco defensive lineman Ray McDonald is arrested on suspicion of felony domestic violence in San Jose.

5/13/2014: Carolina defensive lineman Greg Hardy is arrested on misdemeanor charges after allegedly assaulting his ex-girlfriend.

2/15/2014: Ray Rice is arrested and charged with simple assault after he allegedly struck fiancée Janay Palmer in a casino elevator. A grand jury indicted him on a more serious count of aggravated assault in March.

11/25/2013: Minnesota corner A.J. Jefferson is arrested and charged with one count of felony domestic assault following a fight with his girlfriend. He was released by the team.

5/3/2013: Arizona linebacker Daryl Washington is arrested for assault after an argument with an ex-girlfriend in her apartment. He was sentenced to one year of supervised probation.

Because football before everything. A video of a woman being dragged from an elevator while unconscious from a punch to the face by her fiancé warrants only a two-game suspension? And the eventual termination of his contract happens only after video of the actual blow ticks off enough people to scare bigwigs into doing what they should have done seven months ago? And football fans go back to throwing remotes at TVs on Sunday and emptying savings accounts for stadium seats and sporting $150 jerseys bought from NFL.com, like nothing ever happened?

Because football before everything. OK, so maybe the NFL's PR department isn't all that inept. It has, after all, convinced fans to overlook the NFL's and the teams' roles in downplaying the significance of their employees' transgressions off the field. They even propped up an assault victim to deliver carefully constructed statements at a press conference next to her attacker (now-husband) apologizing for "her role" in the assault.

Because money and image before everything.

I cannot understand how we as human beings can support—with our time, our wardrobes, our pocketbooks—an organization that has consistently shown a complete lack of respect for its fans by assuming they won't care that one of their heroes knocked the mother of his child unconscious without much regard. That fans will continue to rally for his team that has done little to punish him for his actions.

Oh. Right.

Football is an all-American sport, and your team is your city. I get it. But this is as anti-American as it gets, and it has to stop. Stop going to the games. Make your own jerseys. Hit the owners where it hurts, their pocketbooks, and maybe Roger Goodell and crew will finally have to listen.

Ray Rice runs out of second chances in NFL

The Baltimore Sun

The Baltimore Ravens are standing by Ray Rice no longer.

The team announced Monday that it has terminated the contract of the 27-year-old running back on the same day a new video surfaced showing him striking his then-fiancee.

NFL commissioner Roger Goodell announced that Rice has now been suspended indefinitely.

Those decisions come about seven months after Rice was arrested and initially charged with simple assault following an altercation with Janay Palmer, now his wife, in an Atlantic City casino. It caps a stunning fall for Rice, who had been suspended two games by the NFL for violating the league's personal conduct policy.

The video released Monday by TMZ Sports appears to show that after Rice and Palmer hit each other in a Revel casino elevator, Rice threw a punch with his left fist, knocking Palmer off her feet and into a railing. A previously released video showed the aftermath, with Rice dragging Palmer out of the elevator.

The release of the new video comes less than 24 hours after the Ravens lost 23-16 to the Cincinnati Bengals with Rice serving the first game of his suspension, and 10 days after the NFL announced more severe punishment for domestic violence.

An NFL spokesman said league officials had not seen the video from inside the elevator until Monday.

"We requested from law enforcement any and all information about the incident, including the video from inside the elevator," league spokesman Greg Aiello said. "That video was not made available to us and no one in our office has seen it until [Monday]."

In announcing the new domestic violence penalties Aug. 28 after public backlash to Rice's two-game suspension, Goodell said in a letter to all 32 NFL owners that he "didn't get it right" when he handed down Rice's punishment in July. The new penalties include six games for a first offense and a potential lifetime ban for a second offense.

Rice was charged with felony aggravated assault in the case, but in May he was accepted into a pretrial intervention program that allowed him to avoid jail time and could lead to the charge being eliminated from his record.

1	Tough loss for the Bears on Sunday. Too early to talk about their playoff chances?	I have a better chance of making the NFL playoffs than the Bears.	Does anyone else hear a trumpet playing taps?	We talkin' 'bout playoffs? Not losing a winnable game? Not interceptions? Playoffs? Next question.	Not too early. The guys have to be embarrassed on national TV first. Wait, they play when on Sunday?	Yes. No playoff team has ever lost to the 2014 Bills.

The NFL punished Josh Gordon's marijuana abuse with a year off and no day job.	Bart Scott didn't blindside tackle Boomer Esiason on "The NFL Today" set. Seems hard to not do.	The Bears Conteven tackle.

Flamenco dancing with Reggie and B.J.—until he blew his knee out.	Taking the ACT challenge.	Probably visited La Sagrada Familia or walked the Picasso Route. Or he ate Skittles in his hotel room all day.	Sitting really still surrounded by soft stuff.

Sunday's Bears-Buffalo game pulled a 30.3 local rating on Fox 32. That means nearly 1.1 million homes were tuned into the telecast; 1 local ratings point is worth 35,000 homes. The game peaked with a 34.9 rating in overtime, which even more fans wished they had turned away from before the disappointment that resulted from the Bears' 23-20 loss.

Death Cab captivates at Hideout/A.V. Fest

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Real talk: The weather Friday night in Chicago was miserable, the kind of weird-ish humid drizzly garbage that makes you want to curl up with a hot toddy and, well, a Death Cab For Cutie album. There was just one good reason to be outside: Listening to the real thing at the Hideout Block Party/Onion and A.V. Fest.

Masters of the slow burn, the band wisely chose to kick off its final U.S. show with guitarist Chris Walla with its most buildup-heavy track, "I Will Possess Your Heart." It's an 8-minute-plus song that's mostly intro and never feels unwelcome. The band also dashed off some of my other favorites, like "Title and Registration," "Long Division" and "The New Year," the latter of which is a staple on my Jan. 1 must-listen list. Death Cab, however, might be a band that's better when physically and emotionally contained inside four walls. The pairing of "Grapevine Fires" and "Marching Bands of Manhattan" to close out the set carried nowhere near the tear-inspiring weight of "A Movie Script Ending" and "Transatlanticism" when I last saw the band at the Metro. I do applaud the band's decision to play older tracks, rather than breaking out the new material that lead singer Ben Gibbard promised is on the horizon. It was a classy way to end Walla's career as a Death Cabber.

GETTY IMAGES FILE

Also, I continue to find it creepy when the entire audience sings along with Gibbard's acoustic "I Will Follow You Into The Dark," which has become a live staple since the release of "Plans." It's still about suicide, guys.

Goddess
BANKS

By Ernest Wilkins

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

Let's get this out of the way up top: BANKS (yep, all caps) is not the next Lorde, despite the obvious similarities. Both have a propensity to wear black clothing! Both are white women who sing! However, to simply cast aside the 25-year-old L.A. native's debut album as "Pure Heroine 2" because of stark, somewhat swamp-like electronic production would be a disservice to what ends up being an impressive introduction.

A self-taught singer, BANKS (real name: Jillian Banks) molds her voice to each song's purpose. On title track "Goddess" she spits venom; "She gave it all, you gave her [bleep]/ You shoulda crowned her, 'cause she's a goddess/ Now you gotta deal with this glitch on your shoulder/ [Bleeping] with a goddess, you get a little colder." On "You Should Know Where I'm Coming From," she calmly confirms that her power is not to be trifled with; "What If I said I would break your heart? What if I knew what would rip your mind apart?" The intensity is there in spades and gives us a deeper look into her psyche, a refreshing revelation since Banks has eschewed interviews and reluctantly participates in social media, save for the time she posted her real phone number to Facebook.

The collaborators and producers on "Goddess" read like a who's who of sexy electronic R&B. Names like Lil Silva, Shlomo, SOHN and Jamie Woon have cranked out countless piles of stark, synth-gorged music for years, and their respective talents lead to a pop album that's moody without being tiring. While the lows

("Under The Table," "[Bleep] Em, Only We Know") lean toward blah-ballad status, the highs (the title track, "Beggin For Thread," "Alibi") are some of the better moments in pop music this year.

Hot tip: If Banks sounds like your cup of tea, use this opportunity to delve fully into Pitchfork '14 acts Kelela and FKA Twigs. Both acts excel at this style of gloomy electro-R&B and definitely are worth your time.

ROYALLY EXCITED

START THE SHOPPING LIST—PRINCE GEORGE IS GETTING A NEW SIBLING

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Few phrases get the British excited quite like “fish ’n’ chips,” but unfortunately that’s not what this article is about. Instead, it’s dedicated to their other favorite topic—the royal family! Prince William and Duchess Catherine of Cambridge announced Monday that they’re expecting their second child. Kate is once again suffering from hyperemesis gravidarum—aka severe morning sickness, which sounds awful—so her pregnancy was once again announced early.

We’ve followed the little family since before Wills and Kate got hitched, but how well do you know the royal brood and their relatives? Take our quiz to find out.

Rock 'n' roll Rannells

Andrew Rannells, who recently took over the title role from Neil Patrick Harris in "Hedwig and the Angry Inch" on Broadway, has been settling into his new shoes. The "Girls" star told The Hollywood Reporter that he prepped for the part of the transsexual rocker by watching Tina Turner and Iggy Pop videos. And at 36, he's also glad to bring some life lessons to the stage. "At 23, I hadn't had that much relationship experience, and now I feel like there's a lot more of that that I can bring to the role," he said. In other "Hedwig" news, Vulture reported Monday that "Dexter" star Michael C. Hall will take over for Rannells after the latter's final performance Oct. 12. Killer casting job!

'Girls'-y girl

Plenty of women of a certain generation have matched themselves with a "Sex and the City" character, but Taylor Swift is not of that generation. Instead, she's picked out her "Girls" pairing. "I've thought about this a lot," she told Rolling Stone. "I'm Shoshanna. Shoshanna gets excited about things, she's really girly. And when she was in a relationship that was very comfortable, she made the decision to get out and go experience new things on her own. And now she's becoming more sure of herself and taking life head-on, in a way that I can relate to. Even though I've never accidentally smoked crack at a warehouse party and run pants-less through Brooklyn." Give it time.

Well hello to you too

Is Channing Tatum trying to go from movie star to YouTube star? With material like this, he just might succeed. On Monday morning, Tatum released the video for "The Dick Graze" through his personal channel. The co-vert ad for "22 Jump Street's" DVD release features the "Magic Mike" star explaining his new alternative to shaking hands—grazing a dude's crotch. Not to be left out, co-star Jillian Bell teaches us the science behind the boob graze. It's silly. It's fun. It's worth watching.

Best wishes!

Now this is the kind of wedding news we WANT showing up on our Facebook feeds. Longtime loves David Burtka and Neil Patrick Harris were married over the weekend in Italy, thr.com reports. "How I Met Your Mother" director Pam Fryman officiated the ceremony, which also involved the couple's 3-year-old twins, Harper and Gideon. Burtka and Harris have been together for 10 years, and we couldn't be happier about this marriage if we actually knew them in real life.

THE QUOTE

"I think this movie says, 'That's OK. Maybe I was meant to sleep with all those guys. Maybe I wanted to. Maybe if I could go back and do it all again, I'd do the same thing.' It's a total liberation, especially for young women."

—Reese Witherspoon, to The Hollywood Reporter, on the message behind her new movie, "Wild." Witherspoon's character hikes the Pacific Crest Trail while on a quest to overcome negative incidents in her life.
